Victims of domestic violence may struggle with substance use and/or substance use disorders. This training will address the common challenges associated with victims experiencing domestic violence and substance abuse and discuss ways in which domestic violence agencies can collaborate with substance abuse programs and detox centers to provide wraparound services for victims in crisis.

As a result of this training, participants will be able to:

- Explain the connection between the co-occurrence of substance use in victims of domestic violence.
- Describe different types of substances and how they may affect a domestic violence victim's physical and cognitive functioning.
- Identify three best practices for serving domestic violence victims with a co-occurring substance use disorder.

Recognize two ways to leverage agency collaboration with substance use treatment services.
